ARGUMENT AGAINST MEASURE R

Burlingame has always had a range of housing options, creating a vibrant and diverse community. While maintaining a varied housing stock is a real priority, Measure R is a deeply flawed, ambiguous ordinance with no legal or financial accountability to residents.

We urge you vote NO on Measure R.

Measure R mandates a Rental Housing Commission; an unaccountable body with the power to assess fees, hire countless staff and lawyers, and sue at will – virtually a blank check. The power of taxation should not reside in an unelected body. Moreover, appeals would go directly into San Mateo County’s overburdened courts.

Measure R is unexpectedly broad, applying not just to apartments, but to homeowners who rent out a single unit. They would face significant red-tape and fees to remove a tenant, even if only to move themselves or a family member into their own home.

The ordinance regulates hotel rooms, creating problems for an industry that significantly contributes to Burlingame’s budget and economy.

Measure R does not screen by income, so wealthy people could occupy below-market units for decades as newcomers struggle to find affordable housing.

Finally, Measure R potentially exposes the city to expensive litigation, paid for by Burlingame’s general fund, reducing resources for services and capital needs.

The unintended consequences of these extensive rules, costs and bureaucracy could be to reduce housing stock as owners remove rental units. Without continued reinvestment in housing, quality diminishes, values decline and the tax base for schools erodes.

Maintaining a variety of housing options and a fiscally sound city are important priorities for Burlingame; Measure R is bad public policy that does not advance these goals. Burlingame would be poorly served by Measure R, with its unaccountable, expensive Rental Housing Commission and the ensuing legal environment.

Join neighbors, civic leaders, school officials, and local business owners: vote NO on Measure R.
